

ROSS TURNER

TRUMPET

Ross Turner began his serious musical studies through private lessons, studying classical trumpet and music history and theory. After high school, he then continued his classical studies at the University of Victoria, earning a degree in Music History. From there, he went to the Utrechts Conservatorium in the Netherlands for Orchestral Studies, and then on to the Orchestral Training Program in Toronto.

Mr. Turner's most influential teacher was Louis Ranger, former co-principal of the New York Philharmonic. It was Ranger's musical insight that instilled in him a love of classical and modern classical music.

Mr. Turner has performed with several orchestras and chamber groups in Canada and has also performed in over sixty music theatre productions, touring North America and most of Asia.

Mr. Turner continues to enjoy playing in a variety of ensembles in addition to orchestras, and currently plays often in Toronto, Niagara-on-the-Lake and in one of Windsor's favourite rock bands, Nemesis.
